

Student and Faculty Diversity

Maryland

Current College Faculty Do Not Reflect the Diversity of Their Students

Faculty diversity is not a new issue, but it is an important one. While the college student population has become increasingly diverse over the past decade, there are still far too few Black, Hispanic and American Indian or Alaskan Native faculty members.

General Population: 40.1% of Maryland's general population are Black, Hispanic, or American Indian or Alaskan Native

College Students: 40.6% of students at Maryland 2-year and technical colleges, public 4-year institutions, and private not-for-profit institutions are Black, Hispanic, or American Indian or Alaskan Native

Faculty: 18.2% of full and part-time faculty at Maryland 2-year and technical colleges, public 4-year institutions, and private not-for-profit institutions are Black, Hispanic, or American Indian or Alaskan Native

Research shows that racial and ethnic diversity has positive effects on the educational experiences and outcomes of students. A recent study found that Black students who enroll in STEM courses taught by Black instructors are more likely to persist in a STEM field after their first year. In addition, some scholars posit that minority faculty members can help recruit underrepresented students, helping to diversify institutions. When the diversity of the student body is reflected in the faculty, underrepresented students can feel more connected to their institutions and students from majority groups have increased opportunities to benefit from a broader representation of perspectives.

Representation in Maryland

At the 2-year and technical college, public 4-year and private 4-year levels in Maryland there is a representation gap between faculty and undergraduate students. Black and Hispanic scholars remain largely underrepresented at the faculty level, particularly at 2-year or technical colleges and public 4-year institutions. Asian student and faculty demographics are not disaggregated here because they are not historically underrepresented in the faculty context, particularly in the STEM fields.
