

How Higher Ed Can Emerge Stronger Post-Pandemic

After a year of trial and uncertainty, higher education leaders have an opportunity to address new challenges as well as longstanding ones exacerbated by the pandemic. During this series, SREB and Huron experts will share insights into innovation and showcase examples from a variety of colleges and universities.

Administrative Efficiencies Enhance the Mission

April 14, 2 pm EST

- Are administrative services structured to allow leaders to maximize the resources available to invest in academic, research, community and student missions?
- Do the services align with the costs to deliver them to students, faculty and other constituencies?

Enrollment Management and Strategy

April 28, 2 pm EST

- What does our approach to enrollment management look like as higher education emerges from the pandemic?
- Does our approach reflect changes in demographics, demand, and increased parent and student price sensitivity?
- Are we being thoughtful about our long-term student pipeline and adjusting our enrollment strategy accordingly?
- How should we assess current articulation agreements between four- and two-year institutions?

Ensuring Community Colleges Emerge Stronger

May 12, 2 pm EST

- With fewer resources and a marked decline in enrollments during the pandemic, how are community colleges using agility and ingenuity to respond to increasing financial pressures?
- What creative strategies are two-year colleges using to ensure student success while remaining operationally resilient?
- How are community colleges and four-year institutions collaborating on student success and graduation rates?
